

Contributors

Kimberly Bartosik danced for nine years with Merce Cunningham and creates her own work in dance and multi-media. She dedicates her Ode to the Liberal Studies Triangle Club.

Hilla Dayan has served as an intervention coordinator for Physicians for Human Rights and the Association for Civil Rights, Israel. She is an activist and supporter of feminist and solidarity movements against the Israeli occupation.

Elizabeth Donovan is a first year M.A. student in Sociology. She currently works in publishing and her graduate focus is on the arts and non-profit organizations.

Carlos Figueroa is a Ph.D. student in the Political Science department at the Graduate Faculty. His research interests include the politics of citizenship, American jurisprudence, and contentious politics.

Andrew Gold is a first-year student in Liberal Studies and a freelance journalist.

Mark Grueter is a first-year student in Liberal Studies. He can be contacted at markgrueter@hotmail.com.

Marcela Romero Rivera is an M.A. student in Liberal Studies. Her interests are poetry, discourse, translation, psychoanalysis, and performance arts.

Adam Rosen is a second-year student in the Philosophy department at the GF. He is currently working on a study of the intersections of feminisms and psychoanalysis and a project considering the viability of a politics without sovereignty.

Amy Sodaro is a first-year student in the Liberal Studies Department.

Sarah Stodola is a first-year Liberal Studies student. Her academic interests include writing, cultural history, and modern literature.

Alex Urevick has been a member of the New School Community for five years. He graduated from Eugene Lang College, is a computer technician for the university and is currently taking classes in the Liberal Studies Department of the Graduate Faculty. He can be reached at urevicka@newschool.edu

Erica Weitzman has been thinking disgusting thoughts.

